Media literacy isn't just a nice-to-have skill anymore — it's essential. At its core, media literacy means understanding how media works — who created a message, why it was made, and how it's meant to influence the audience. Students are constantly surrounded by messages: some are helpful, others misleading. Teaching them to analyze, question, and evaluate media gives them the tools to think critically and make informed choices. The good news? You can build media literacy into what you're already doing, one step at a time.

Use Headlines as Warm-Ups

Start class with a real-world headline — ideally one related to your subject area.

- ☒ Is this information reliable?
- ☒ Where did it come from?
- ☒ What might be missing?

This five-minute routine builds awareness and can lead to great discussions.

Compare Two Sources

Pick two texts on the same topic but from different perspectives. This could be editorials, news articles, or video content. Ask students to compare:

- ☒ Language and tone.
- ☒ Choice of images.
- ☒ What facts are emphasized or ignored?

This is a great way to teach bias (偏见) and point of view, especially in ELA or social studies.

Build Visual Literacy

Use political cartoons, advertisements, or photos to practise interpreting:

What's the message?

- ☒ How is it being communicated visually?
- ☒ Who benefits from this image?

This kind of analysis helps students read beyond the text.

This is about teaching students to be curious, and you just need to model curiosity. When you say, "Let's figure out where this came from," you're demonstrating to students how to think critically. And when they see you do it regularly, they start doing it too.

21. What is the primary purpose of teaching media literacy to students?

- A. To arouse their interest in media.
- B. To enhance their literature skills.
- C. To develop their critical thinking ability.
- D. To broaden their general media knowledge.

22. Which technique of teaching media literacy is recommended?

- A. Using visual aids in teaching.
- B. Asking students to compare two sources.
- C. Providing materials that include pictures.
- D. Having students figure out better headlines.

23. How can teachers best stimulate students’ curiosity?

- A. Ask routine questions.
- B. Show, don’ t just tell.
- C. Reward curious students.
- D. Tell, don’ t just watch.

Days of heavy rain caused dangerous flooding in central Texas on Friday. The Guadalupe River overflowed, flooding neighborhoods and washing away roads and bridges. Hundreds of people had to leave their homes. Officials say this is the worst flooding the region has seen in years. Below is the breakdown of damages by county.

County	Economic Losses	Buildings Damaged
Hunt	$ 28 million	85 (including 12 historic structures)
Kerr	$ 15 million	62 (including 3 bridges, 2 historic buildings)
Comal	$ 5 million	34 (including 2 highways)
Blanco	$ 2 million	18 (including 1 historic building)

Below were key updates as of Friday night.

1. Casualties & Emergency Response

The floods have killed 24 people, and 25 campers from Camp Mystic remain missing as searches continue. Emergency crews including the Texas National Guard have rescued 237 people using helicopters supported by over 500 personnel from federal agencies (including FEMA and the U.S. Coast Guard) that are currently assisting in affected areas.

2. Challenges

Rescue teams struggled to reach isolated communities as flooded roads and downed power lines blocked access, delaying critical aid. To make matters worse, early weather warnings had underestimated the flood’ s severity, leaving residents little time to reach safety.

3. Government Response

Governor Greg Abbott issued an emergency disaster declaration for 15 central Texas counties, accelerating state funding for recovery efforts. Lieutenant Governor Dan Patrick noted communication outages likely delayed locating missing campers.

4. Recovery Outlook

The Red Cross has set up 12 shelters, helping more than 1,200 displaced families. Environmental agencies warn that flooded factories could cause pollution. Meanwhile, transportation officials say highway repairs may take weeks.

21. Which county was most severely affected in the floods?

- A. Hunt.
- B. Kerr.
- C. Comal.
- D. Blanco.

22. How many people have been saved by emergency crews as of Friday night?

Can doctors make better cancer treatment decisions if they consult fish? Previous studies have shown that zebrafish avatars could help identify cancer treatments. Rita Fior, a developmental biologist and her colleagues now want to determine whether that ability can benefit patients.

Zebrafish avatars are tiny, fast-growing models of individual cancer patients created by transplanting the patient's own tumor (肿瘤) cells into 2-day-old zebrafish embryos (胚胎). These tiny fish then act as living substitutes for the patient, allowing researchers to test multiple cancer drugs or radiation on the patient's tumor cells within 4-7 days—far quicker than traditional mouse models.

In a 2024 report in Nature Communications, the scientists generated avatars for 55 patients and putting the fish on the same type of chemo-therapy the people received. For 50 of the patients, the fish “predicted” the outcome of treatment. An added benefit, Fior says, is that avatars can reveal key characteristics of tumors such as whether they are likely to spread.

Zebrafish are more similar to humans than cell cultures and far cheaper to raise than mice. The small, transparent embryos are also easier to analyze, says Sofia de Oliveira, a biologist at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine. “You can visualize the whole animal under the microscope,” she explains, “and easily determine the spread of cancer cells.”

In the clinical trial, Fior and her team will test that promise by separating cancer cells from the fluid that builds up in the stomach of people whose cancer cells have spread outside the original site and is usually drained as part of treatment. “We are not doing an extra procedure on the patients,” she says. The cells will then be implanted into the fish embryos. Instead of testing experimental drugs, as many other clinical trials do, the study will determine which combination of treatments works best. Most of the patients will receive medications suggested by the zebrafish results.

28. What are zebrafish avatars?

- A. Models of mouse embryos.
- B. Radiation on the tumor cells.
- C. Drugs for multiple cancers.
- D. Replacements for cancer patients.

29. How do zebrafish avatars help doctors with cancer treatments?

- A. By forecasting treatment results.
- B. By predicting where tumors will spread.
- C. By killing tumor cells in cancer patients.
- D. By transplanting zebrafish cells into humans.

30. What makes zebrafish an ideal species for cancer research?

- A. Their similarity to cell cultures.
- B. Their small sizes and dark embryos.
- C. Their low cost and ease of analysis.
- D. Their complex appearance and structure.

31. What is the primary goal of the clinical trial led by Fior and her team?

- A. To develop new experimental drugs for cancers.
- B. To test the safety of chemo-therapy on zebrafish.

- C. To identify the ideal combination of cancer therapies.
- D. To separate cancer cells from the fluid of cancer patients.

My parents have a big cat at home named Comet. He has big ears, a large head, huge feet, and a gentle personality—but we have no way of knowing for sure. He came from the local animal shelter. My brother and I didn't really want him, since he was a kitten and we wanted to adopt an adult cat because we thought the kittens would be more likely to find another home, but my little sister insisted.

We brought Comet home that day. He soon fell ill and grew alarmingly weak—his ribs stuck out, his eyes swelled, and his fur dulled. He became so fragile that I feared touching him, though he clearly needed care.

Some years later, I went home one afternoon after having had an emotional breakdown. My whole life was upside down. I felt hollow, dead, an empty shell of a person. I had no idea what pieces were even worth picking up again.

I found Comet curled up in a corner that afternoon. He'd been asleep, but he lifted his head and looked at me when I came in. I reached a hand toward him. He nuzzled it, immediately burst into a deep, loud purr, and gave me a perfectly content cat grin. I moved my hand down to scratch his back and sides, and he stretched luxuriously, giving me looks of absolute adoration.

At that point, it hit me: this cat loved me. The cat I didn't want, the cat I couldn't bear to take care of when his life depended on it, loved me. And he would always love me. No matter what was going on in my life, Comet would still look up from a nap when I entered the room, would still love to be touched by me.

I believe love is steadfast. I believe that real love, whether it comes from your families, or a shelter cat, is offered determinedly and unconditionally. Love is what enables us to pick up the pieces of our broken lives and go on.

24. Why was the writer unwilling to adopt Comet initially?

- A. He thought adult cats were more gentle.
- B. His sister resisted adopting Comet.
- C. Kittens were thought easier to be adopted.
- D. Comet was a weak and sick kitten.

25. How did Comet help the writer go through his emotional breakdown?

- A. By lying quietly beside him.
- B. By making him feel deeply loved.
- C. By distracting him with grins.
- D. By protecting him from loneliness.

26. What does the underlined word “steadfast” in paragraph 6 mean?

- A. Faithful.
- B. Romantic.
- C. Temporary.
- D. Unforgettable.

27. Which of the following can be a suitable title for the text?

- A. Love wins all
- B. Love on four feet
- C. An encounter with a kitten
- D. A rescue of a shelter kitten

In a city of wealth, comfort and fine food, there's a quiet alley (小巷) in London's Camden where passers-by often take several photos. Sharing space with elegant cafes and world-class bars, a tiny fruit and vegetable stand seems to have been transported from a country road far away. But what makes the stall even more remarkable in the heart of Camden is that payment is on the honor system—customers just throw coins into an old mailbox—and most of the items on offer are priced at £1 in a neighborhood where fresh food usually goes for much, much more.

The greengrocer with a heart of gold—a Chinese immigrant in her 50s who runs this stall alone—is rarely glimpsed by her grateful customers. Lena Wong rises before dawn to prepare to work in her small plot in Enfield, outside London. Depending on the season, she'll reap onions, eggplant, green peppers, etc. And she works several overnight shifts every week at a nursing home to supplement her and her husband's modest salaries.

All this started one day as she was selling produce in Enfield, and a young customer said that he barely earned enough to buy food. "I hate the idea of young people walking around hungry," Lena Wong said. The seed was planted. "I want young people to feel that they're not forgotten, that they are treasured," she said. "That not everyone is out for himself. I can make money anytime. Right now, I want to give young people a helping hand."

Sometimes, when she arrives late in the day, customers get a chance to thank her in person. In return, she's fond of offering botanical sayings that she collected from a life that has had its share of both joy and pain. "Even in a field full of weeds," Lena Wong likes to say, "you can grow something—if you put in the effort."

24. Why is the stall in the quiet alley special?

- A. It is located in an expensive cafe.
- B. People often take good pictures there.
- C. It operates on a trust and credit system.
- D. The goods sold there come from distant places.

25. What can we learn about Lena Wong's job?

- A. It requires her to work long hours.
- B. It pays well to support her family.
- C. It attracts widespread media attention.
- D. It focuses on organic produce.

26. Who inspired Lena Wong to help others?

- A. Her grateful customers.
- B. A hungry youth.
- C. Her modest husband.
- D. Some young people.

27. Which of the following best describes Lena Wong according to the text?

- A. Kind-hearted.
- B. Well-educated.
- C. Job-centered.
- D. Strong-willed.

My childhood was a painted picture of a sunny sky and rolling green fields stretching to the horizon. It tasted of sharp berries and smelt of sour grapes. My family lived in a cabin in the countryside, but I lived in my mother's arms. They were so delicate but strong, and her red hair falling around me was like a curtain that separated me from the world.

Childhood was simple. The borders of my village were the furthest my troubles went and monsters only lived in the pages of books. Every day was a waking dream of running races and muddy knees. My village was archaic, dying cabins housing dying farmers with dying traditions. There weren't many children but me and the other boys; boys of butchers and sellers formed our own group.

They called us wild. I suppose we were. Trees and mountains formed our playgrounds and fights broke out as easily as sudden laughter. Liberated from the restrictions of society, we would bound into the woods, deeper and deeper until we found a lake which, with a wild yell, we would jump into all at once.

My most vivid memories from boyhood center around that lake. Water shone brightly and the sounds of our screams broke into the outcry from birds. The shock of cold water against sweating skin would wake every nerve in my body and my bare feet would hit the sinking muddy bottom. As we submerged, time would stop, movements slowing as bubbles rose around us.

I was drowning. I was living. I was living. I was drowning. For timelessness or a second (both felt the same), we would pause, curl up, and then be forced back out into breathing air.

We should have known that it wouldn't last forever. Yet, even under the best circumstances, there's something so tragic about growing up: your perspective on the people and life around you changes; you always struggle to reach a mirror, only to find yourself tall enough to see your reflection one day and find a different person staring back out at you.

24. Why does the author describe his mother's red hair as "a curtain that separated me from the world" ?

- A. To show her artistic personality.
- B. To emphasize her protective presence.
- C. To illustrate his fascination with colors.
- D. To reveal his fear of social interactions.

25. What does the underlined word "archaic" in paragraph 2 most probably mean?

- A. Old-fashioned.
- B. Time-honored.
- C. Mountain-ringed.
- D. Poverty-stricken.

26. What does the lake symbolize in the author's boyhood memories?

- A. A dangerous pause in time.
- B. A mirror reflecting adulthood.
- C. A place of social restrictions.
- D. A temporary escape from reality.
